Let's face it, sometimes life can be tough. It can knock you down and then sit on your chest till you can hardly breath. That's why it's so important that home be just the opposite.

Home should not only be a place of healing, but also that proverbial "wind beneath your wings." It should be a place where everyone can relax, let their guard down, and not have to worry about being blindsided by criticism, sarcasm, or put-downs. Why would you tear down those you love, when you could build them up? "Kind words at home are blessed sunshine" SD 252.

Take the time to learn each other's love language. Show them by your actions that you care, and then back it up with your words. Let your words be loving, compassionate, respectful, affirming, encouraging, optimistic, truthful, supportive, peaceful, and timely. Ask God to fill you with His Spirit so that by your words and actions, people might be drawn to Him.

"Pleasant words are like honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and healthy to the bones" Proverbs 16:24.
